Hanging of John Guedel for the Murder of Adam Zimmerman-A Respite Expected for the Condemned up to the Last Moment. The Belleville (Illinois) correspondent of the Chicago Times, under date April 26, gives the following account of the execution of a murderer in that place:

John Guedel, the murderer of Adam Zimmerman, was hanged here to-day at twenty-three minutes to eleven A. M. There were few persons present, as it was generally supposed the sentence would be committed, so long a time having elapsed since the murder. There had been a respite to the criminal from March 29 to April 28, and there had been such strong influence in his tavor brought to bear on the Governor that the execution was a matter of surprise to the community.

A despatch from the Governor, received last evening 1st nine o'clock, tolermed the Sheriff that the Governor, bough deeply regretting his inability to releve the unfortunate criminal, did not feel at liberty to commute the sections.

bough deeply regretting his inability to reheve the unfortunate erminial, did not feel at liberty to commute the sentance.

The despatch was read to Guedel, who smiled and said:—"Oh, I'll not be hung yet. Send me in the morning some cigars and a bottle of wine. He slept soundly during the night and ate his breakfast as usual. He spent the morning writing letters to various persons, drinking the wine and smoking the segars sent bim. He was very cool to the clergymen present. He said he had so time to talk; that if there were a God he would be saved; if there were none, he didn't care.

At a little after ten o'clock he was told he was to be hanged in a quarter of an hour. This secured to surprise him. "Good God!" he said, "they won't hang me, will they' If I'm hung put in the papers that I'm serry for my friends' sake—for my poor old mother—and that I'm not guilty."

Going out with the Sheriff, he did not seem much agitated, and walked up the steps of the scaffold quite firmly. Here, however, his courage failed him, and he burst into tears. He called several persons by name, shook hands with them, and told them good bye. When asked if he had anything to say, he talked several minutes, in German, crying at times. He persisted in declaring his innocence, and did that he was deserted by his lawyers, that the people of Madison county were murdering him.

After the cap was adjusted, he cried out:—"I go to God, in death, declaring my innocence. Good —."

The drop fell while he was speaking. He struggled very little. The legs were drawn up several times, there were slight throes of the body, and all was over.

Though he strongly asserted his innocence on the scaffold, it was proved on the trial that he had confessed the murder, and other estitence, though circumstantial, proved his guilt beyond the shadow of a doubt.

Meridan, and is and to be a man of some wealth. Fitz-gerald attempted to escape from his pursuers when they came up, firing several shots at them as he retreated. The shots were returned, and one of them took effect in his face, but did not injure him seriously. On being arreated he confessed the crime with which he was charged, and implicated an elder brother, who was also

The prisoners were taken to Summerville, where they made a full confession. The younger Pitzgerald stated that the plan of the murder was arranged by his brother, but the deed was committed by himself, and that there were two other merchants in the village whom it had been their intention to murder and rob. He confessed also to having killed several other men for their unorsy, one of them an old man in the lower portion of the State, whom he called up out of his bed at night and shot. Re stated further, that while crossing Pearl river, after having killed Nunn, he asked the ferryman how much money he had; the ferryman replied that he had ten deliars. "If he had had twenty dollars," said Fitzgerald, "I would have killed him."

On the night of the 12th the younger Fitzgerald, secording to his own statement, approached the store of Floyd Nunn and concealed his horse (a stoisn one) in the bushes, and waited until some negroes who were making some purchases in the store had gone, when he went up and asked permission of Nunn to spend the night with him. The permission was granted, and as it was then eleven o'clock, they at once went to had together. Nunn was very restiess, and neither went to sleep. Fitzgerald complained of being chilly, and was told by Nunn that he inde better get up, kindle a fire and take a drink of whiskey. This Fitzgerald did, and Nunn having turned in bed, with his back to the fire, Fitzgerald seized a billet of wood and struck him on the head two or three times. Thinking that he had killed his victim he broke open and rifled a trunk from which he had seen Nunn take some money when they had traded horses a few weeks before. He then mounted his horse and rode away.

After the arrest of the two brothers $1,000 or the stolen money was recovered, and the elder Fitzgerald wrote to his father from Summerville, telling where $250 additional could be found, and requesting him to send it to Mr. Nunn's family.

Neveral of the citizens of Summerville started for Mecon with the murderers, but had gone not Bride.

[From the Chicago Times, April 27.]

At half-past four o'clock on Thursday afterneon a large gathering of ladies and gentlemen—the élite—took piace at the St. Paul's Universaits; church, on the corner of Van Buren street and Wabash avenue. The happy faces, the cordial greetings, and the genial smiles and glances which were exchanged, denoted that something of a pleasing nature was about to take piace. Happiness was depicted on every countenance, even Dr. Ryder himself, the worthy pastor, seeming to feel that the occasion was one which would long be remembered with feelings of unusual pleasure. It had been announced to the select assemblage that a marriage ceremony was to take piace. In fact, each and every one present had received invitations to honor the bride and her intended hushand by being witnesses of the nupulal ceremonies. Mr. Stephen W. Tomhinson and kins Emma Knowies were to be married. That is the plain English which signifies wiffit was intended to be transacted. The hour came, the witnesses came, the preacher came, but the bride and bridgeroom came not. The former had prepared for the occasion, at her residence, and was waiting and watching in trembling anticipation, with her bridai robes on, for the coming of her future husband. She waited in vain. The recreent Tomlismon came not, and the fact finally impressed itself upon her mind that she had been wantonly, cruelly decived. The spectators, wondering and conjectured, weat back to their hemes, and the event when gave promise of such great happiness terminated in terrible and econodice. He has paid his addresses to Miss Knowles for three years, and represented that he was the principal partner in the publishing arm of fouritance & Brother. The fact is that he was set a partner at all, but simply an employé of the first. It is supposed that he left the city; at is least, a pale hearing his description purchased two tackets at the Michigan Southern Kaitvost depot yesterday morning, and it is helved that the man was the verified and educated a
